MISCELLANEOUS READING.

THE MISSISSIPPI BY NIGHT .- By night the scene is one of startling interest and magical splender. Hundreds of lights are glancing in different directions, from the villages, towns, farms, and plantations on shore, and from the magnificent "floating palaces" of steamers, that frequently look like moving mountains of light and flame, so brilliantly are these enormous river leviathans illuminated, outside and inside. Indeed, the spectacle presented is like a dream of enchantment. Imagine steamer after steamer coming sweeping, sounding, thun-dering on, blazing with these thousand of lights, easting long brilliant reflections on the fast rolling waters beneath. There is often a number of them, one after another, like so many comets in Indian file. Some of these are so marvellously and dazzlingly lighted, they really look like Aladin's palace on fire, (which it is in all likelihood would be in America,) and skurrying and dashing down the stream, while perhaps just then all else is darkness around it. I delighted, too, in seeing, as you very frequently do, the twinkling lights in the numerous cottages and homesteads dotted here and there, and you may often observe large wood fires lit on the banks, looking like merry-making bonfires. These, I believe are usually signals passengers, goods, and animals.—Lady Wortley's Travels in the U. S.
